- 1999: New Jersey Governor Christie Todd Whitman recognizes njerves.org as "New Jersey's largest comprehensive source of information about civic and service organizations".

- 1998: $2.6 million of service is rendered to the New Jersey community.

- 1998: njerves.org: New Jersey's one-stop shop for civic sector information and connectivity is launched.

- 1997: CASE opens in Rutgers Newark.

- 1995: CASE is selected as an AmeriCorps service site; 70 CASE classes are offered, more than 2000 service-learning students.

- 1994: Michael Shafer, Professor of Political Science at Rutgers is named director of the CASE Program. Under his leadership the CASE program offers its first Community Partner Conference.

- 1993: President William Clinton visits Rutgers University to recognize the CASE program as a model for all colleges and universities across the nation.

- 1989: Community Service House is opened, offering an opportunity for students to share their community service ideas and passions.

- 1988: Rutgers University President Edward J. Bloustein proposes community service as an integral component of a liberal education; The Board of Governors endorses this idea and Rutgers University dedicates itself to citizenship, service, and diversity.